

CALL FOR PAPERS

10 FEB. 2017

Special Section, 30 April 2017: Law, War & New Technology

Advances in science and technology throughout history have facilitated major transformations in warfare. The rapid development of information and communication technology over the past few decades is a case in point. Precision guided munitions and remotely controlled aircraft have made military interventions more surgical yet more ubiquitous. Outer space and cyberspace have created new opportunities and vulnerabilities, thereby adding whole new dimensions to conflict. At the same time, the international law framework dealing with the use of force has not changed much.

With 29th Helsinki Summer Seminar the volume 25 of the Finnish Yearbook of International Law (FYBIL) offers a forum for discussing whether and how international law can deliver on its civilising and humanising promise in the face of profoundly changing means of warfare.

Those interested in publishing an article in the “Law, War & New Technology” special section of FYBIL volume 25 should submit their manuscripts by 30 April 2017 (extended deadline). The manuscripts should not exceed 15,000 words in length including footnotes.

General Section

FYBIL honours and strengthens the Finnish tradition in international legal scholarship.

While firmly grounded in traditional legal scholarship FYBIL is open to contributions from all over the world and from all persuasions. It stands out as a forum for theoretically informed, interdisciplinary, high-quality publications on all aspects of public international law.

Annual volumes of FYBIL include articles, shorter notes, commentaries, book reviews, and overviews of Finnish state practice.

Submissions for the general and special sections of FYBIL undergo a double-blind review. The editorial board and renowned experts of various areas of international law will review the submissions’ intellectual quality and prospects for advancing academic debate.

FYBIL accepts submissions for the general section continuously.

All inquiries and materials should be sent to fybil@fsil.fi

Visit us at fsil.fi/fybil
facebook.com/fybil